Did the Cities Fail at Planning?
Wednesday Oct. 27th—Realtor Building
(Schedule and Topics Subject to Change if Circumstances Require)

As Utah’s population centers expand, the growing pains include an evolving change in who has the final say in land use decisions. A more recent trend, beginning with the Military Investment Development Authority (MIDA) in 2007, and continuing with the Inland Port Authority, the Point of the Mountain State Land Authority, and a proposed Utah Lake Authority, major land use planning decisions are being made by appointed officials and not by local elected city councils or county commissions. Is the traditional way we plan outdated? How do local officials and citizens provide input to a development authority?

Panelists Include:

- Senator Jerry Stevenson, R-Layton
- Mayor Erin Mendenhall, Salt Lake City
- Prof. Arthur C. (Chris) Nelson, University of Arizona
- Paul Morris, Director, Military Installation Development Authority
- Alan Matheson, Director, The Point
- A panel of other noted commentators on Utah Land Use and Development
- Moderated by Wilf Sommerkorn, ULUI

All of Those Attending May Engage in this Conversation.

Luncheon Discussion:
Equity and Equality in Planning

Mary Kay Peck, FAICP, former President of the American Planning Association will speak on land use ethics, professionalism and civility. Our society is evolving at a rapid pace. Wednesday Schedule and Topics

Other Topics for Discussion on Wednesday
Break Out Sessions—1:30 to 4:50 p.m.
(Schedule and Topics Subject to Change if Circumstances Require)

Legislative Efforts to Promote Housing Affordability. The issue of housing costs has been driving land use legislation for several years. What effect have these new perspectives for housing had? What other solutions and strategies are being considered for 2022 and beyond?

Bargaining for a Rezone: Is Seeking Trade-Offs for Density Now the Norm? The fallout from lawsuits and amendments to the state land use statutes seems to reinforce a growing trend to lock in lower densities in residential zones than the market would justify. Will every subdivision or housing development now require a legislative rezone with the attendant requirements in time, cost, and political drama? What are the consequences and alternatives for better planning?

Pandemic Long-Term: What has Changed in How We Deal with Land Use Issues? Working from home, buying online, and skyrocketing prices for housing. As we look to 2022 and beyond, what cultural and economic changes will be driving future policies as our cities and counties evolve? What other trends will shape land use planning within the next decade?

The Role of the Planning Commission? Time to Rethink or at Least Reboot? With typical high turnover, newly appointed citizen planners often need intensive training and orientation. How do we implement new state training requirements to improve how planning commission and city or county legislators deal with planning issues? Are we using a process that is both outdated and ineffective?

Design and Construction Solutions for Housing Affordability. The 2021 legislature dramatically limited local design standards in new construction. Will this lower housing costs? What are the other likely consequences? How do design controls, materials requirements, and other regulations on residential construction affect the cost of a home?

Shall we Zoom? Innovative Methods to Engage the Public and What We Learned from the Pandemic. For more than a year, every meeting and hearing was online. What have been shown to be the positives and negatives of engaging the public virtually? Do we have new opportunities after the pandemic to reconsider how we interact with our constituencies? What changes did Covid bring to the larger planning landscape?
